

GREEK ROYALISTS ASK FOR AID FROM AMERICAN ENVOY

Monster Demonstration In the Streets of Athens Following Seizure of Grecian Warships, Railway Stations, and Port By Marines and Sailors of the Allies

SITUATION IS GRAVE

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)

LONDON, October 18—Greece has reached a crisis and the nation bids fair to split into two warring factions. The despatches from Athens last night, following a coup by which the Allied powers gained possession of the last ships of the Greek navy, told of the growing tenseness of the situation, and the nearness of an open break of the Royalist faction with the Allied troops now holding Athens and Piræus.

The Allies moved swiftly yesterday, and last night 1000 French marines held the railroad stations, the Castalla Barracks and the city hall of Athens, as well as the port of Piræus, while Italian soldiers and sailors, armed with machine guns, are in possession of the Municipal theater, one of the key points of the city.

GREEK WARSHIPS ARE TAKEN

The coup of the Allies was carried out without a hitch yesterday, and the two Greek battleships, purchased by that government from the United States, the Lemnos and the Kilkis, as well as the Greek cruiser Averoff, have been taken over by the French commander, Admiral du Fournet, who commands the allied fleets that are guarding the waters around Greece, and sent to join the rest of the fleets, off Piræus. The Kilkis and Lemnos formally were the U. S. S. Idaho and the U. S. S. Mississippi. The Averoff was presented to the Greek nation by a millionaire of that name, who died in 1909. Leaving a part of his fortune for the express purpose of building up the Greek navy.

The seizure of the warships came upon the heels of the delivery of a note from Admiral du Fournet to the Greek government. This note, according to despatches from the correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Agency and Reuter's News Agency, was of "an extremely grave character," and it was productive of immediate and important developments.

CONSTANTINE HASTENS TO CAPITAL

King Constantine, who has been of late staying almost entirely at his country home at Tatoi left there at once and hurried to his capital. On his arrival in Athens he immediately called an urgent meeting of his cabinet and held a conference. The war council was then summoned to assist, and both bodies remained closeted with His Majesty for more than an hour.

While this conference was in session the streets began filling with swarms of people, Royalists for the most part, who gathered in the open places to discuss the situation. These crowds were intensely excited and when Admiral du Fournet appeared on his way to the palace he was hissed by thousands.

GREEK TROOPS PATROLING STREETS

Orders were issued by the government to patrol the streets with Greek troops and cordons of the guard were thrown out, and around the positions held by the French and Italian marines and sailors. It was formally announced that this step was taken in order to prevent a clash between the Allied troops and the populace.

King Constantine visited the barracks where his guard is quartered and addressed the officers calling upon them to remain loyal to Greece, and assuring them that they would not suffer.

To the officers of the three Greek warships seized by the Allies the King said that he was proud of their loyalty and told that they would suffer "no evil consequences" for their faithfulness to him and to the nation.

POLITICAL SITUATION 'IMPOSSIBLE'

It is pointed out here that the political situation in Greece has become impossible from the point of view of the Allies. The resolute defiance of Constantine of the wishes of a large majority of his people, and the growing power of the revolt against the king, have led the Allied authorities to feel that the time had come when it is necessary to eliminate the troublesome factor in their Balkan problem.

It is essential, it is declared, that Greece should be secure behind them when they strike their real blow against the Bulgarian and German armies in Macedonia.

CONSTANTINE MENACE TO ALLIES

The presence of the King and the royalist party in their rear and the possibility of intrigues and cabals undermining them at the base of their operations could not be tolerated. Furthermore it is asserted that by far the larger part of Greece and the majority of the population are heartily in sympathy with the cause of the Allies and convinced that Venizelos was absolutely correct in his stand for entering the war on the side of the Entente.

Even in troubled Athens yesterday there was evidence that all of the city is not royalist and there was some sympathy with the troops of the Entente.

According to a telegram from the Reuter's correspondent at Athens four thousand malcontents were parading the streets of the capital at the time the despatch was sent, waving the Greek and the American flags. Large crowds stopped in front of the American legation, and sent a formal protest against the landing of marines and sailors from the warships of the Allies. The American minister was absent.

The correspondent ends his despatch by the statement that the "situation is exceedingly dangerous."

RELIEF FOR POLAND DEFINITELY BLOCKED

Germany Refuses To Meet Demands Made By Allies For Distributing Supplies

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)

LONG BRANCH, New Jersey, October 18—The President announced yesterday that the efforts of the belligerents to reach an agreement whereby the United States could assist in large measure for relief to the thousands of homeless, destitute and starving people in Poland, have failed.

To his messages asking that the nations cooperate in allowing food to be sent to the sufferers, the king of Great Britain, the czar of Russia, the emperor of Germany, the emperor of Austria and the president of France replied, but the rulers disagreed as to the terms of sending relief.

The Allies have refused to allow supplies of any kind to be passed through the blockade unless they were distributed under a system which would guard against the use of any for the Germans occupying Poland. Germany refused to agree to the plan of supervision which the Entente insisted upon. This original deadlock is now shown to have blocked the whole plan for relief.

American Colleges Will Build Up Big Army Reserve

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)

WASHINGTON, October 18—Sixteen colleges and universities of the United States have been authorized as training schools for army reserve officers by the war department.

The plan is to have the colleges train such students as care to take courses along the lines laid down by the war department, so that a competent reserve may be built up.

A tentative program was discussed at yesterday's conference and will be submitted to a committee for preparation along the lines described in the national defense act passed by the last congress.

RUMANIAN RETREAT IN TRANSYLVANIA HALTED ON BORDER

Bucharest Reports Check of the Advancing Teutons Along Whole Frontier

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)

PARIS, October 18—The Rumanian retreat in Transylvania has come to a halt. Whether this is a permanent or merely a temporary check of the advance of the Teutonic armies under the command of General von Falkenhayn remains to be seen of course, but Bucharest says that the Rumanians have now reached positions which they are confident of holding.

It is extremely difficult to formulate an idea of the exact condition in this section of the war front as the reports are daily contradictory and confusing. It appears certain however that in the Tuz Valley the invaders have been driven back across the frontier, suffering more or less heavy losses.

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)

The heaviest fighting of the day has been in the Volhynia, Galicia and Transylvania regions. There have been a succession of heavy attacks and counter attacks, both sides claiming successes for themselves and reverses for their opponents.

The reports from Vienna and Berlin tell of the success of the Teutonic arms in the East, where they say, that the Germans and Austrians have pierced the Russian lines on a front of a mile and a quarter, capturing many guns and 1600 slaves, including thirty officers. Petrograd on the other hand reports the failure of the counter attacks launched by the enemy. The official report of the Russian general staff says:

The Teutonic armies are counter-attacking the Russians, who have been smashing their way forward southeast of Lemberg, in the battle for this important fortress.

Bombardments north of Korytnitz, near Brest-Litovsk, preceded the attack. The Russians have captured fifty prisoners. Allied Attacks Fail. In its general report of the situation the German general staff says that the attacks of the Allies near Guederecourt have broken down under German fire. The German positions have been under artillery fire all day.

On the east front the Russians have been heavily defeated in Galicia. Their repeated attacks have been repulsed by the Germans, and trenches a mile and a quarter in extent have been taken by the Teutons, who captured 1500 prisoners.

Two main Teutonic attacks marked the fighting on the Somme front. These were directed against the French lines east of Belle-en-Santerre, and broke down under the French barrage fire. French Gain Ground. North of the Somme the French official statement says that the French are driving ahead. They are taking the offensive and have "made good progress, advancing deeper into the German positions in the vicinity of Bully and Sailly, where they have taken a group of houses and repulsed a number of German counterattacks.

The advance means that the men under General Foch are slowly but surely flanking the German positions to the south, in the wood St. Pierre Vanst. The Serbians have repulsed the Bulgarians in counter attacks by the latter in the Cerma river region. Southwest of Monastir the severe fighting of the past few days continues.

MURDERER TRIED TO BLAME WOMAN

Filipino Tragedy At Hakalau Is Tale of Primal Passion and Killing Without Mercy

(Mail Special to The Advertiser.)

HILO, October 16—After weeks of hard work and following the faintest of clues Deputy Sheriff Henry Martin has finally discovered the alleged murderer of Doncio Cendu, whose body was found beside the railway track at Hakalau on October 5 last, with a broken neck. It looked as though Doncio had fallen from the belt road bridge, which crosses the railway track there, and such would probably have been the verdict of a jury, except that Deputy Sheriff Martin became suspicious because the dead man's hat was found further up the road.

With Mike, the Filipino police officer Martin took the trail and never let up until Santiago Gohat and Marciana Elibonada had been arrested and signed their confessions as to just how they came to kill Doncio. The story of the murder brings to mind the prehistoric, primitive days of the cave-men in the free play of passion, wife stealing and death.

Once they were in the clutches of the police, however, the cowardly Filipino tried in his first confession to place the blame for the murder upon his woman, but when confronted with the confession of Marciana he changed his confession, acknowledging that he had struck Doncio with a stick. He also added a note to Marciana's confession in which he states that her confession is true, but that she leaves out a great deal of what happened.

The difference in the first confession of Santiago with that made by Marciana is that he claimed the woman pounded Doncio on the face and head with a stone, while he held him down, but in the second confession states that he hit him on the head with a stick, knocking him down. Then they threw him over the embankment to his death.

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)

In his confession Santiago tells in detail of the visit of Doncio Cendu and two friends from Kakaia, where they worked, to the Hakalau camp, where Santiago kept a Filipino boarding house. He said that Doncio told him that they had come to the camp to take a "wahine" away with them. They were not particular, stating that if they could not get a certain woman they would take another. One mentioned, they refused to take because she had too many children.

That night there was a dance and Santiago and the others went there and drank some wine. Later, according to the confessions, Santiago, Doncio and others returned to the boarding house and there Doncio tried to drag Marciana away with him. A fight followed in which Doncio's friends disarmed Santiago, and Doncio dragged Marciana out of the house and ran with her to the Japanese School house and then to the government road.

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)

Santiago, meanwhile had secured another club and started in pursuit of his woman and Doncio. When he came up with them on the road Doncio threw stones at him in true Paleolithic style and kept him off until near the road bridge across the railway tracks.

Here Santiago rushed in and smote his rival with the club and felled him. For an hour says Marciana her confession, they watched beside the body, then decided that the man was dead, so while Santiago took Doncio by the shoulders, Marciana took her late lover by the legs and together they threw him over the embankment to the railway tracks below. But they did not think of throwing his hat with him.

During the search for the murderer Deputy Sheriff Martin made over a dozen arrests, finally securing the two who made the confession. They will be given a hearing before Judge W. S. Wise in the District Court on October 18.

HUGHES SAYS HE WOULD NOT BE BLUFFED AS PRESIDENT WAS

Would Have Appealed To People When Railroad Strike Threatened and Would Have Made Public Opinion Force Arbitration

UNDERWOOD TARIFF IS INSUFFICIENT FOR FARMERS

Candidate Meeting Huge Crowds As He Tours Farming States and Is Hitting Straight From the Shoulder In His Talks

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)

ST. LOUIS, Mo., October 18—The passage of the Adamson Law at the demands of the leaders of the great railroad brotherhoods was a surrender to force of the government which can never be repaired, declared Charles Evans Hughes, Republican candidate for the presidency, in an impassioned address delivered here last night, to an enormous crowd.

Cheered as he made point after point, the speaker warmed to his work, his voice growing stronger and more resonant as he proceeded, and he struck straight from the shoulder at the things he believes have been abuses in the Wilson administration.

Tariff Bill a Failure

Earlier in the day the Underwood tariff law had been the target of his hottest attacks, and he had told the farmers of Mitchell, South Dakota, that the measure of which the Democrats had promised so much, had failed utterly and had failed particularly in assisting the farmers of the nation to meet the constantly increasing cost of existence.

"It has proved utterly inadequate to the demands of the agricultural communities of this nation," he said.

To the crowd here he turned to another page and spoke of the railroad situation leading up to the passage of the Adamson Act. He told his hearers that the President should have declined to be bluffed by the leaders of the brotherhoods, and should have gone straight forward in making arrangements for the proper arbitration of the whole question.

"What would you have done to stop the strike," yelled a heckler among the crowd in the body of the hall.

Replies To Heckler

"The passage of the Adamson Bill was a surrender to force," answered Mr. Hughes, "and as such utterly incompatible with the history of the American government. This is the country one president of which once said, 'Millions for defense but not one cent for tribute,' and this country pitched into and beat out of existence an age long evil on the strength of those words."

Mr. Wilson, however, sees things differently. He listened to the bluff of the railroad men and submitted to its implied threat. You ask me what I should have done in his place.

"I would have insisted upon arbitration. Had that been refused I would have gone to the people of the country and told them the full facts in the case. I would have laid before them all the information I had, and I would have placed the responsibility for the refusal to meet the arbitrator just where it belonged."

Would Have Forced Issue

"At the same time I would have continued my work of getting together a commission of arbitration so strong in the minds of the whole people, fair and so distinguished, that their very names would have compelled attention and respect of the entire country. I would have given to them the right to settle the matter as they believed right, and just and proper."

"That is what I would have done in the case that confronted Mr. Wilson, and I believe that no man or group of men in the nation would feel himself or themselves strong enough to flout such a commission, or to have dared to hold up the commerce of the United States if that had been done."

(Associated Press by Federal Wireless.)

LONDON, October 18—According to despatches to the Exchange Telegraph News Agency here, the German authorities in Belgium are forcing Belgians to work upon the railroads, and have shot twelve men who refused to labor in the big munition plant at Ghent. Three hundred other workers who had refused at the task set them by their conquerors have been arrested and sent to Germany.
